

FIPDes Webinar 2020

Opportunities for the transition to sustainable, healthy and inclusive food systems

Lessons learned from Covid-19 Pandemic

2020, Thursday 3rd September – 14:30-16:30 (CET)

Food in a circular Bioeconomy

Michael J. O'Donohue – Head of TRANSFORM Division, INRAE, Toulouse, France

Michael O'Donohue is a biochemist and enzymologist who has worked for INRAE since 1996. During his career, Michael coordinated many projects, mainly focused on biorefining. He is currently leading a European distributed infrastructure for industrial biotechnology (www.ibisba.eu). Importantly, since 2016 Michael is head of INRAE's TRANSFORM division, which focuses on Science for Food, Biobased Product and Waste Engineering (<https://www.inrae.fr/en/divisions/transform>).

Green solutions for green food; case of grass

Vibeke Orlien – Associate professor, University of Copenhagen, Department of Food Science, Design and Consumer Behaviour, Denmark

Vibeke Orlien is PhD degree in food chemistry and is associate professor in food chemistry. Her research areas are thermodynamics in food chemistry, non-thermal processing technologies, and protein modification. Process-property-structure interactions in food materials and food systems from molecular size to macroscopic levels based on molecular and mechanistic understanding. Practical functional food design covering the coupling between food process methods and technologies and food chemistry.

New complexities for the sustainable food supply chains

Hind Bendaoud, Head of Supply Management – Sodexo France

Hind Bendaoud is Procurement & Supply Chain Director at Sodexo, one of the worldwide leaders for food services in multiple environments such as schools, healthcare, corporate or sports & leisure. Before joining Sodexo France, Hind held several procurement positions in the European and Global Procurement teams for Sodexo and previously to that in Food Retail.

Conclusive remarks

Alisa Tiganj – European Commission

Alisa Tiganj is an official of the European Commission, currently responsible for the coordination of food policy and the Farm to Fork strategy in unit on policy perspectives in DG AGRI. Prior to that, she was a Member of Cabinet of the Commissioner for transport (2015-2019) and an advisor at the Permanent Representation of Slovenia to the EU, responsible for agriculture and fisheries.
